THE BEGGARS OF LONDON.

Places Where Poverty Clings to the Skirts of Wealth—Impostors.

In most of the capitals of Europe the poor live at the back door of the rich. Wherever wealth makes an attempt to escape from poverty by segregation or colonization poverty clings to its skirts as meteors follow in the trail of a comet. It may be said that 100,000 persons in all stages of poverty live in the east end of London, because the rich earn their gold there. Another 100,000 live in the west end, because the wealth of the well-to-do classes is spent there. Within bow-shot of Buckingham Palace there are houses in which the rooms are rented and sub-rented to beggars, thieves, seamstresses and a whole tribe of seedy adventurers who earn a dubious livelihood by preying on the credulity of their philanthropic neighbors.

For begging in London has been reduced to a fine art, and there are probably 10,000 persons unworthy of any sort of charity who make their living in this way exclusively. Children are sent out, whole droves of them, in rags which scarce conserve the vital heat in their tiny bodies with a distinct understanding that there is no bed, breakfast, dinner or supper for them, except what they can earn in the streets by stealing or begging, as the case may be. Woe to the little wretch who returns penniless to his parents in the evening. The boys are beaten; the girls are buffeted. In the very worst of themselves on the banks of the muddy Thames these little urchins literally pick up a living, the extent of which is measured by the philanthropy or sense of justice of the junk-shop keeper. Still as I have already remarked, begging is the mainstay of out-cast London. The street Arab of St. James' and St. Giles' could teach many a lesson to the rapacious Bedouins who exact black sheep from the sight-seer at the pyramids, or the hazzarim who threateningly demand alms in the streets of Naples; and on the slopes of Vesuvius. Compared with the London street Arab, or the professional mendicant of the Strand and the Holborn viaduct, the importunate widow of Holy Writ was an agreeable visitor.

The begging letter impostors of London, like all vagabonds, live in tribes and spend their money as freely as they earn it. For obvious reasons, they select domiciles which shall give them the greatest readiness of access to their intended victims, the nobility and the large class who live in independent circumstances, having accumulated fortunes or retired on annuities. Ex-officers of the army and navy are particularly favored by the begging letter-writer, and as a result Westminster, Piccadilly and Chelsea, because of their convenience to the horse guards and Somerset house, are largely patronized by the fraternity. The dodges of the begging letter-writer are innumerable. He has the army and navy list at his finger's ends and can take up the peerage and baronetage of Debutant and point out one after the other the popularities and especially the money-giving or parsimonious tendencies of each. Members of parliament are invariably avoided, for these gentlemen are law-makers and great sticklers for the observance of the laws, and on the same principle that they never give a hack-driver more than his legal fare, they pointedly refuse the begging letter-writer to the rolling office of the work-house or to the nearest police magistrate—London cor. Baltimore Herald.

As Dangerous as a Buzz Saw.

The dude is now becoming as dangerous to approach as a buzz saw. Fashion has decreed that he shall practice the carrying of his cane after the manner known in England as mowing. When you encounter him, face to face on the avenue, jerking his way along as if every bone in his body was loosely articulated with cord, and carving the air all around him with ferocious sweeps of a cane as big as one of his own legs, you recognize him as a thing of terror, indeed, and if you are a wise man give him the sidewalk to himself. The perilous character of this performance is enhanced by the fact that, when the dude once gets started in this species of pedestrian St. Vitus, dance he can not stop himself, but has to keep it up like a car on a down grade until his momentum exhausts itself. The other evening one of them ran into a crowd of people coming out from a concert at Chickering hall. He was working like a steam engine when the collision occurred, and a moment more the air was pierced with shrieks and lamentations as his deadly cane bored and slashed its way through the crowd. He came out on the other side in triumph and went jiggling off up the street looking as if he was going to drop pieces at every step, but making the air whistle under the sweeps of his irrefragable staff. It is the upper level of a dude ambition to be a first-class "mower" as they call it in dandy old London, don't you know. My old friend, Professor Senec, I understand, teaches it by rule, like the single stick, and has no end of pupils—New York News "Babbie."

Theodore Parker on the Platform.

Theodore Parker was one of the most wonderful platform speakers we have ever had. No man ever felt more keenly. He knew he was misunderstood. He knew that he was a disadvantage. No man was so widely the idea of humanity. He dealt in a vast variety of blows. Sarcasm was native to him, owing to his intense hatred of a sham. He would not compromise. I saw him once in the New York tabernacle, when his appeals were irresistibly strong. Not having sympathy with his views, he nevertheless pounded me with his logic until I could not think or move. Then, in the midst of his argument, he moved away from his desk, marched across the great stage, and began to pound on the huge wooden pillars that flanked the platform. He pounded till the hall echoed. "This," he cried, "is the argument we got sound, sound, nothing but a magnificent sound. It is the echo of the blows of the old brute ages reverberating into our days to the ears, and stop them against the truth." The effect was wonderfully dramatic and powerful. It opened our ears to an unusual degree of candor and fairness.—Chicago Journal.

Jay Gould's Talent for Photography.

Jay Gould has developed a talent and talent for photography. On his recent yachting trip to Cuba he carried a camera and all the rest of the needful apparatus along, and visitors at his down-town office are treated to an exhibition of pictures whose duplicates are not to be found outside of Mr. Gould's possession. They are all of subjects aptly chosen, and the workmanship shown in the print is worthy of a man equipped to earn a living at the business.—Chicago Journal.
